THE LILITH FACTOR: SUCCUBA Greg Leland and Lilith Anciens live in two very different societies, though they live in the same city. The only place their lives intersect is the Dojo they both attend and where they glimpse each other without meeting. Neither could know that one week later their paths would collide head-on, with lethal results. A veteran with nothing left to fight for, Greg sees Lilith surrounded by five men and comes to her aid against abysmal odds. But Lilith is more than she seems and their attackers end up hurt and humiliated. And when three of them want a rematch using a baseball bat and a shotgun, no one walks away unscathed. Greg stops a blast by stepping between the gunman and Lilith. Although wounded herself, she makes a determined attempt to keep Greg alive long enough to reach the nearest trauma center before she weakens and they both die. Having barely survived a bitter divorce, he is drawn to her for reasons he can't explain. She also feels an attraction she doesn't understand. Both have secrets they do not readily share, but both know the bond between them cannot be denied for long, despite the danger it represents. What might have been a unique love story becomes much more as the secrets they both hold start to unravel. Some of which could affect the entire world -- a world that is unaware of the threat that could sunder it. Government agencies, secret societies, and power-crazed loners want items they believe Greg and Lilith hold the keys to. Items that could change the world forever -- or end it. It falls to Lilith and Greg to find a way to stop it. In order to survive, they will need to learn two very important lessons: 1.) Every myth contains 'truth' at its core, waiting to be found. 2.) "To stay young requires the unceasing cultivation of the ability to unlearn old falsehoods." WHEN YOU STOP LEARNING, YOU START DYING.
