This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1855 edition. Excerpt: ...We are, therefore, to travel during the night, as long as I am able for it, and to stop for an hour or two, that I may sleep in the carriage, if unable to go on. I have been so unwell to-day that I have not been able to leave the house, except for about ten minutes, to walk through the principal street here. It is but a third-rate sort of town--the houses small and poor-looking; no buildings going on, and the spirit of improvement nowhere visible. The inn in which we now are is of considerable size, but seems tumbling to pieces,--propped up with wood, and the plaster peeling off the walls. We met several ladies as we walked along, all of them in lace or gauze caps, with a profusion of artificial flowers. Many of them wore silk dresses, without any neckerchief, but with a scarf thrown loose over the shoulders, as if dressed for the evening--strange figures they appeared to us, picking their way through their dirty streets. The peasants, though rather untidy in their appearance, wear a picturesque head-dress; their hair, which in general they have in the greatest profusion, is plaited 3&3, bandeau round the head, and above this they have a roll of white muslin twisted round and hanging down on one side. Some have a large round straw hat above this turban; they wear colored petticoats, generally of some bright color, loose white sleeves, and a breastplate of black leather, which last is very ugly; they are a remarkable goodlooking people, many of the young girls extremely pretty. The men, though in a dress as savage-looking as possible, are also very handsome, dark Spanish-looking people. " Both in Hungary and Transylvania there are a great many gipsies; we often met most picturesque groups, and were frequently driven by gipsies....
