The Oat Milk and Honey titles are a specific fragrance oil scent, not that your lotions will necessarily have these ingredients. (as we describe in the recipe) Often times in cosmetics actual food products don't mix well with the ingredients, sometimes they do. There are two scents that we do use more frequently than others. That is Lavender and Oat, Milk, and Honey. The reason for this is because my intention was to give insight on the products that sell best at the market. I thought I made this clear in the book, but I will mull it over for clarification. Our objective was also to make products that sell to the greatest number of people at public stands. You can however change any recipe with the fragrance that you like. Also, as a side thought. Yes, sometimes recipes do look similar and small changes between oils and clays do make a big difference. One of the things that is unique about our book is that these are our real recipes that we have practiced, and know are pleasing to our customers, as compared to some books where people just find recipes on the internet and copy them into some pages. Thank you for your feedback. :)
